Carolina Law

Where Research and Scholarship Flourish

Carolina Law has faced many difficulties during its 175 years of existence, but nothing has forced as much change as the global pandemic. It has changed the way we learn, teach and work. For many, the past year has been exceedingly difficult, both personally and professionally.

Even during this challenging year, our dynamic faculty has produced thoughtful, timely scholarship to advance conversations within their respective areas of expertise. In topics ranging across automated hiring, legal writing, gerrymandering, student debt, school policing, bot contracts, impeachment, administrative deference, prosecutor elections, employment law, consumer protections, race and criminal records, bioethics law, LGBT rights in Asia, poverty in the juvenile justice system, tenants' rights, disbanding police agencies, racial injustice and more, our faculty pushed forward with their research and writing.

As one of the highest ranked public law schools in the country, Carolina Law will continue to explore topics of importance to our communities, prompt legislative and regulatory reform, and shape public policy. I look forward to sharing more of our faculty's determined and inspiring work in the future.
