Carolina Law

Where Research and Scholarship Flourish

Carolina Law has learned many things during the pandemic—better ways to communicate, learn, teach, and research. Our dynamic faculty has continued to ask questions, investigate trends, dig deeper into policies, search for solutions to challenging issues in the legal landscape and find ways to better understand and apply the law.

Through our faculty's research, we are advancing conversations about such topics as artificial intelligence and race, the spread of mis- and disinformation online, corporate board diversity, legal writing, bioethics and health decision-making, forum selection clauses, student debt, gender and race in trademarking cases, qualified immunity, plea bargaining, employment law, obstacles for racial justice and LGBTQ equality, bankruptcy, race and politics, automated legal guidance, immigration and more.

As a top ranked public law school, our mission is to look at our community, state and nation to see where the legal needs are and find ways to address them through research, legislative and regulatory reform and public policy guidance. I'm inspired by the thoughtful and measured scholarship produced by our faculty and look forward to sharing more with you in the future.
